What is the Financial Services Board hiding? Has the FSB been captured?: Part II

For far too long the FSB has been getting away with its often shadowy and cosy relations with the very industry it is constitutionally required to control and regulate in the interests of the public. The fact of the matter is that the public knows precious little about what the FSB has been up to. Has the FSB not learnt the most fundamental lesson from the ongoing state capture saga? You can only hide things for so long. By DALE T MCKINLEY.

National Treasury and the financial services sector: Whose interests are really being served?

Hundreds of thousands (potentially millions) of poor and destitute ex-workers and their families have lost most of their confidence in the integrity and 'reputation' of the Financial Sector Conduct Authority and its Treasury parent, to perform their functions in a just, equitable and efficient manner, to serve their interests.
